

Distaff

Written by Webmaster

Monday, 01 December 2008

Men, women, and children not participating in the militia or music units portray a variety of roles and a variety of the necessary chores of supporting the camp such as cooking, sewing, and other displays of colonial life. Militia units from 1770s would have had a large support network of family members and friends to help the militia Company function. We are especially enthusiastic about the participation of children, believing that our reenactments are an excellent way for them to learn about our past.

Last updated (Monday, 01 December 2008)